Since the 18th and 19th century, there have been Roman foundations in Oberrheinische Funde zutage, which are now displayed at the Roman Museum. From the 2nd to the 4th century, Mainz was inhabited by the Romans. The site was used as a fortification in the Roman period, as well as the early Christian period. The remains were discovered in the 19th century and are now exhibited at the Roman Museum.

Foundations of a Roman Sacred Site
In 1970, the foundations of a Roman building were discovered here, first interpreted as the remains of a Roman temple. These remains were probably those of a shrine, or stone fragments of an altar. The site was later used as a passage for the Roman road.
